Petitioners, James A Long, et al., respectfully request that a writ of certiorari be issued to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in this case.

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit is reported at James A. Long, et al. v. Firstrust Corp., 134 F.3d 312 (5th Cir. 1998) (App. A). The opinions and judgments of the District Court are unreported (App. B, C & E).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The fundamental question in this case is whether a litigant is entitled to relief from a state court judgment when further collection of the judgment is sought by the owner or assignee of the judgment after the owner of the judgment has caused to be submitted to the Internal Revenue Service and the debtor a 1099 information return form showing the receipt of income based upon cancellation of the debt.

This suit was instituted as a declaratory judgment action pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2201. The jurisdiction of the District Court was invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1331 and 1332 because of diversity of citizenship, and because there was presented a federal question involving interpretation and application of federal statutes. The judgment debtors on the state court judgment, Petitioners herein, sought a declaration that the state court judgment was not subject to further collection because the judgment owner had issued a report of income to the Internal Revenue Service and to each of the judgment debtors based upon cancellation of the debt. Further, the issuance of the 1099 information return to the Internal Revenue Service and the judgment debtors was done in conjunction with the "write-off" of the debt on the records of the institution. After such actions by the institution, the state court judgment was assigned, and the assignee sought collection of the full debt represented by the state court judgment.

The Petitioners herein sought relief from the further collection of the state court judgment based upon equitable principles, primarily relying upon the doctrine of quasi-estoppel. Petitioners submitted evidence regarding their receipt of the 1099 information return forms, and evidence that the 1099 forms were based upon a unilateral decision by the financial entity to discharge the debt and report cancellation of debt income to the Internal Revenue Service and the judgment debtors. The District Court found that each of the recipients of the 1099 tax form had a taxable event and that their receipt of income was based upon a discharge of the indebtedness from the judgment debtor (App. C). Further, the District Court found that the write off of the judgment debt and the issuance of the 1099 forms was inconsistent with the further enforcement of the judgment, and that the judgment debt was forgiven (App. C). Based on these findings, the District Court concluded and declared that the state court judgment was not subject to continued enforcement (App. C).

The Fifth Circuit found that the debt was not discharged in that the requisites of Texas law were not met in causing a release or discharge of a debt. The decision of the Fifth Circuit did not draw a distinction between judgment debts and debts arising by notes, or otherwise.

Pursuant to the mandate of the Fifth Circuit, the District Court entered its Final Judgment on Mandate After Appeal, reinstating the state court judgment as to each of the judgment debtors, subject to a credit on the judgment liability for an amount shown to be paid by several of the judgment debtors as taxes on the report of income (App. E).

Petitioners' petition for rehearing was denied (App. D).

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

I.

THE PETITION SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE OPINION BELOW CONFLICTS WITH THIS COURT'S PRIOR RULINGS ON THE PRE-EMPTIVE EFFECT OF FEDERAL LAW INVOLVING A STATUTORY SCHEME FOR THE REPORT OF INCOME.

The Petitioners' theory in this case involves the concept of cancellation of debt income, and the inconsistency that would arise when there has been a report of cancellation of debt income to the Internal Revenue Service and the debtor, and subsequently there is a continued collection effort on the debt. A taxpayer is generally treated as realizing taxable income if a debt he owes is forgiven. There is a clear federal statutory scheme for the realization and reporting of cancellation of debt income. Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 61(a)(12), a taxpayer must include in gross income a discharge of indebtedness. The general rule was first espoused in U.S. v. Kirby Lumber Co., 284 U.S. 1, 76 L.Ed. 131, 52 S. Ct. 4 (1931) and further codified in 26 U.S.C. § 108. See also Colonial Sav. Assn. and Subsidiaries v. C.I.R., 854 F.2d 1001 (7th Cir. 1988), reh. denied, cert. denied, 109 S. Ct. 1556, 489 U.S. 1090, 103 L.Ed. 2d 859.

Under the provisions of the Internal Revenue Code, every person made liable for any tax imposed by the Code must make such returns and comply with rules and regulations as may be prescribed. 26 U.S.C. § 6001, 6011. The Code makes provision for filing information returns if there has been a taxable event which may result in reportable income. 26 U.S.C. § 6041, et seq. The various Code sections specify when information returns must be filed to report to the Internal Revenue Service and the individual involved that payments have been made to the individual or other transactions have been entered into which give rise to income. The 1099 forms are the information returns used to report these transactions. Effective after 1993, the provisions of 26 U.S.C. § 6050P specifically relate to discharge of debt by certain financial institutions. Prior to that time, there existed discretion with regard to the submission of an information return which reported income on cancellation of debt. The requirement that the debtor report cancellation of debt income, subject to exclusions, would exist regardless of the receipt of an information return. 26 U.S.C. § 61(a)(12); 26 U.S.C. § 108.

The Fifth Circuit in its opinion properly notes that the "...dispute concerns the legal significance of IRS forms 1099A that were issued by the RTC to appellees..." (App. A).

After reciting the appropriate legal issue, the Fifth Circuit inexplicably fails to acknowledge or discuss the federal statutes which relate to the issuance of the 1099 forms, the concept of cancellation of debt income, the inconsistency of issuing 1099 tax forms and continuing to collect the debt, the statutory and regulatory requirements for information returns, or the pre-emptive effect to be given to the federal statutory scheme for reporting cancellation of debt income.

Further, the Fifth Circuit in its discussion states that,

> ...the primary issue we are asked to decide is whether, under Texas law, a creditor releases a debt by issuing to the debtor an IRS form 1099A in respect thereto and then writing the debt off.

In answering this issue, the Fifth Circuit relies entirely upon Texas law pertaining to release of a debt, rather than follow its own characterization of the dispute concerning the "legal significance" of 1099 tax forms.

Generally, the interpretation and application of the federal revenue act is governed by federal law rather than by state law which may vary from state to state, and the application of state law would cause inequities and conflicts. See generally 47A C.J.S., Internal Revenue § 9 (1998). Federal taxation statutes involve a nationwide scheme of taxation, and there must be uniform application of the statutes without interference or conflict with state law. Petitioners submit that the Fifth Circuit erroneously denied pre-emptive effect to the federal statutory scheme relating to report of cancellation of debt income. The supremacy clause of the Federal Constitution nullifies state law to the extent that it actually conflicts with federal law. U.S. Const, Art VI, cl 2;

Fidelity Federal Savings and Loan Association v. dela Cuesta, et al., 458 U.S. 141, 149, 102 S. Ct. 3014, 73 L. Ed. 2d 664 (1982). The pre-emption of state law may be either expressed or implied, and the pre-emption is compelled whether congress' command is expressly stated in the statute's language or impliedly contained in its structure and purpose. Id. at 675. Federal regulations have no less pre-emptive effect than federal statutes. Id. at 675.

The relevant federal statutes pertain to the definition of income and the reporting requirements on the realization of income. The federal tax collection scheme and the consequences that are attached to those interests are matters left to federal law. United States v. Rodgers, 103 S. Ct. 2132, 461 U.S. 677, 76 L. Ed. 2d 236 (1983) on remand, 712 F.2d 990.

In pre-emption situations, it is appropriate to consider if compliance with both federal and state regulations or laws is a physical impossibility. Fidelity Federal Savings and Loan Association v. dela Cuesta, et al., at 675. It is submitted that the inconsistency noted does create a "physical impossibility," and that the state law cited by the Fifth Circuit stands as an obstacle to accomplishment of the full purposes and objectives of Congress. The federal statutory scheme would be rendered ineffective if the financial entity was in each instance of discharge of debt required to determine and interpret the appropriate law of the state as to whether there had been a contractual or statutory discharge of debt.

Issues as to what constitutes income for federal tax purposes are controlled by federal law. Killoran v. C.I.R., 709 F.2d 31 (9th Cir. 1983). The District Court found that the judgment debtors were recipients of income based upon the discharge of the indebtedness from the judgment creditor (App. C). The Fifth Circuit ignores the District Court finding that there was a taxable event on the discharge of indebtedness, and finds that based on Texas law, the judgment debtors were not released from liability on the judgment and that they were not therefore recipients of income (App. A, Note 3). This represents a clear statement by the Fifth Circuit that Texas law controls in the determination of "income," and the Fifth Circuit fails to recognize the pre-emptive effect that must be given federal tax legislation. The only rationale expressed by the Fifth Circuit regarding the findings of the District Court on the existence of a taxable event, and the receipt of income, is the claimed controlling effect of Texas law regarding release of debts.

It is obvious that compliance with the federal income tax collection scheme is in direct conflict with the Fifth Circuit's opinion that state law would override a decision of a financial entity to discharge a debt and report the cancellation of debt income to the Internal Revenue Service and the debtor. The Fifth Circuit's decision allows a financial entity to make a unilateral decision to discharge a debt and notify the Internal Revenue Service of the cancellation of debt thereby creating a potential tax liability to the debtor, and yet leave the debtor fully liable on the debt. The inconsistency is obvious, and there is no prior legal precedent that the issuance of a 1099 tax form based upon cancellation of debt income is obviated by state law.

Neither the Respondent herein, as owner and holder of the state court judgment, nor any lower Court has denied that the report of cancellation of debt income would be totally inconsistent with further collection of the same debt. Rather than acknowledge this inconsistency and attempt to distinguish or explain how the two positions could exist simultaneously, the Respondent and the Fifth Circuit instead focus on the elements of Texas law regarding contractual or statutory release of debt. The Fifth Circuit decision does not restrict its holding to pre-§ 6050P factual situations, and the decision would be current authority for the proposition that a financial entity can follow the mandate of the federal statute as to report of cancellation of debt income, and yet leave the debtor fully liable on the debt.

The uncertainty created by this Fifth Circuit's decision will impact the Internal Revenue Service, financial entities seeking to comply with the statutory requirements, and the reporting requirements and tax liability of the debtor. Numerous issues are created by this Fifth Circuit's decision, including whether the Internal Revenue Service can compel the report of cancellation of debt income by the debtor, when the debtor remains fully liable on the debt; whether a financial entity incurs liability by making a unilateral decision to cancel a debt and report the cancellation of debt income to the Internal Revenue Service while leaving the debtor subject to continued collection of the debt; and whether the debtor is subject to federally imposed penalties and sanctions for failing to report cancellation of debt income for the reason that he is deemed to remain fully liable on the discharged debt.

The realization of income and reporting requirements on cancellation of debt income as mandated by federal law should not be dependent upon any particular state's law regarding release or discharge of debts. The uncertainty and confusion caused by application of this Fifth Circuit's decision is enormous.

In summary, this case presents a clear situation of the intrusion of state law to thwart a federal tax statutory scheme for properly defining and reporting income. The decision of the Fifth Circuit has national implications in that it permits state law to supersede a determination by a financial entity to discharge a debt on its books, and to cause a report of income to the debtor based upon such discharge. The Fifth Circuit's failure to acknowledge the federal statutes pertaining to cancellation of debt income, and to rely entirely upon Texas law, is erroneous, and should not stand as a national legal precedent on the issues. The Fifth Circuit fails to acknowledge the pre-emptive effect of federal laws regarding the definition and reporting of income, which defies this Court's longstanding holdings that state laws will not be allowed to impede a federal statutory scheme involving nationwide application. By granting this petition for writ of certiorari, this Court can correct the Fifth Circuit's decision and reaffirm that federal statues will be given pre-emptive effect when there exists a conflict with state law.

II.

THE PETITION SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE OPINION BELOW DISREGARDS THIS COURT'S PRIOR RULINGS ON THE CRUCIAL ROLE OF A DISTRICT COURT JUDGE AS A TRIER OF FACT.

The District Court, based upon abundant evidence, concluded that on the issuance of the 1099 tax forms,

> ...in addition to the indebtedness being forgiven, each plaintiff recipient had a taxable event. They became a recipient of income based upon a > discharge of the indebtedness from the judgment creditor, and therefore could not continue to be liable on the same indebtedness that was subject to the discharge (App. C).

Although stated within a conclusion of law (App. C), the District Court's findings that there existed a taxable event, that there was a receipt of income, and that there was a discharge of the indebtedness, are factual determinations which set the basis for the conclusion of law that the judgment defendants, Petitioners herein, could not continue to be liable on the indebtedness. If it is determined that these findings were not purely factual, then it is submitted that such findings involve mixed questions of fact and law, and that as such the District Court findings are entitled to deferential review. Salve Regina College v. Russell, 499 U.S. 225, 233, 111 S. St. 1217, 113 L.Ed. 2d 190 (1991). This Court has held that deferential review of mixed questions of law and fact is warranted when it appears that the District Court is "better positioned" than the appellate court to decide the issue in question or that probing appellate scrutiny will not contribute to the clarity of legal doctrine. Id. at 199.

As a factual matter, the District Court found that the "write off of the judgment debt and the issuance of the 1099 forms was inconsistent with the further enforcement of the judgment" and that "the judgment debt was forgiven" (App. C). The Fifth Circuit in Note 3 of its decision concludes that, > as we hold that the issuance of the 1099s did not discharge plaintiffs' liability on the judgment, it follows that they did not thereby become 'a recipient of income based upon a discharge of the > indebtedness from the judgment creditor' (App. A).

It is submitted that this presents an improper argument to contradict the District Court's findings of fact and conclusions of law. Whether the judgment debtors were "a recipient of income based upon a discharge of the indebtedness..." would be determined by federal law regarding the definition of income. The statement by the Fifth Circuit in Note 3 is in direct contravention of 26 U.S.C. § 61(a)(12). The Fifth Circuit attempts to use its reasoning concerning release of a debt based upon Texas law to finally determine whether income had been generated by the discharge of indebtedness. Had the Fifth Circuit properly given pre-emptive effect to the federal law concerning realization of income and the reporting requirements on cancellation of debt income, the finding by the Fifth Circuit could not be made. The Fifth Circuit's decision presents a clear example of the need to give pre-emptive effect to the federal tax scheme in order to prevent conflicting decisions from multi-jurisdictions regarding the realization of income.

This Court has limited the appellate court's standard of review in Anderson v. City of Bessemer City, North Carolina, 470 U.S. 564, 105 S. Ct. 1504, 84 L.Ed.2d 518 (1985). In that decision this court stated that,

> If the district court's account of the evidence is plausible in light of the record viewed in its entirety, the court of appeals may not reverse it even though convinced that had it been sitting as the trier of fact, it would have weighed the evidence differently. Where there are two > permissible views of the evidence, the factfinder's choice between them cannot be clearly erroneous.

> The rationale for deference to the original finder of fact is not limited to the superiority of the trial judge's position to make determinations of credibility. The trial judge's major role is the determination of fact, and with experience in fulfilling that role comes expertise.

Id. at 528-529. It is submitted that the Fifth Circuit failed to acknowledge the important fact-finding responsibility of the District Court. This is particularly evident when it is seen that the Fifth Circuit relies upon Texas law to characterize a "taxable event" and "receipt of income," when those fact determinations were peculiarly within the fact-finding responsibilities of the District Court and the District Court's findings thereon were in full compliance with federal law.

Appeals from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas.

Before GARWOOD, DUHÉ and DeMOSS, Circuit Judges.

GARWOOD, Circuit Judge:

Plaintiffs-appellees Long, et al., (appellees) brought this Texas law diversity action against defendant Kenneth Turner (Turner), individually, and defendant-appellant Firstrust. Corporation (Firstrust) seeking a declaratory judgment, pursuant to 28 U S.C. § 2201, that appellees had been released from liability on a judgment by the Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC), Firstrust's predecessor in interest as owner of the judgment. Firstrust now appeals the district court's determination that the debt had been released through the issuance of Internal Revenue Service (IRS) forms 1099A and that Firstrust is not entitled to attorneys' fees. Appellees cross-appeal the denial of their attorneys' fees. Concluding that the district court misapplied Texas law concerning the release of a debt, we reverse the declaratory judgment, but affirm the court's decision denying attorneys' fees to both parties.

Facts and Proceedings Below

The current dispute concerns the legal significance of IRS forms 1099A that were issued by the RTC to appellees, who owed an outstanding judgment, then owned by the RTC., on an unpaid loan that they had guaranteed.

The fifteen male appellees guaranteed a loan from MeraBank, Texas, FSB to I.G,P., Inc. in 1984. When the loan went unpaid, MeraBank pursued the debt against the eighteen guarantors and the borrower, I.G.P., and eventually obtained a judgment on August 23, 1990, for the principal of $113,000, plus attorneys' fees and interest, against appellees jointly and severally.

Shortly thereafter, in 1991, MeraBank experienced financial difficulties of its own, the immediate result of which was that the Office of Thrift Supervision ordered a pass-through receivership into a new entity (New MeraBank Texas, FSB) that was placed into conservatorship with the RTC. As conservator, the RTC assumed control over New MeraBank's assets, including the I. G.P. loan and the outstanding judgment against appellees.[1]

In January 1992, while New MeraBank was in conservatorship, an IRS form 1099A, entitled "Acquisition or Abandonment of Secured Property," was issued by New MeraBank in its name to each appellee (in respect to calendar year 1991) reflecting his pro rata share of the outstanding judgment principal, excluding attorneys' fees and interest.[2] The district court found that the 1099s were issued "so that the borrower/judgment debtor could report on his or her [federal income] tax return the event of the forgiveness of the indebtedness and the benefit conferred, "M Two months later, in March 1992, the "Asset Manager" of the RTC, in its capacity as conservator of New MeraBank, made a request to write off the I.G.P. promissory note.[4] The write-off request was approved by the RTC Managing Agent on March 17, 1992, and the loan file was transferred to the RTC's Asset Recovery Division. On April 3, 1992, the New MeraBank went into receivership, with the RTC acting as receiver.

On November 15, 1992, in its capacity as New MeraBank's receiver, the RTC sold the outstanding August 23, 1990, judgment. The RTC executed a "Quitclaim Assignment of Judgment," which transferred the RTC's rights under the judgment against appellees to Firstrust Corporation without recourse, representation, or warranty.

Thereafter, much to the dismay of appellees, Firstrust attempted to collect on the judgment and initiated a state court garnishment action. Believing that the judgment debt had been released by the RTC, as conservator of New MeraBank, appellees brought the instant action, seeking a declaration from the district court that the debt had been discharged by the issuance to them of the 1099A forms. Additionally, they also asserted claims of wrongful garnishment, conversion, unreasonable collection efforts, and negligence.

The case was tried to the court without a jury in July 1996. The district court, in its Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, ruled that the RTC, in its capacity as conservator of New MeraBank, had entirely released appellees of the judgment debt through its issuance to them of the 1099A forms, and, thus, that the judgment which Firstrust had subsequently purchased from the RTC was no longer enforceable against appellees. The court denied appellees other claims, found no liability as to Turner individually, and did not award attorneys' fees to either party,

We reverse the district court's ruling as to the release of the judgment debt through issuance of the 1099A forms, but affirm the court's denial of attorneys' fees to both parties.[5]

Discussion

1. Enforceability of the Judgment

In this appeal, the primary issue we are asked to decide is whether, under Texas law, a creditor releases a debt by issuing to the debtor an IRS form 1099A in respect thereto and then writing the debt off.

The district court found that "the issuance of the 1099A forms by the RTC evidenced their intent to forgive the debt . ., and their intent to write off the judgment debt." The court also found that "the write-off of the judgment debt and the issuance of the 1099 forms was inconsistent with the further enforcement of the judgment" and that "[t]he judgment debt was forgiven." In its conclusions of law, the court determined that "the RTC released the judgments when they issued the 1099 forms," "[t]he judgment involved in this case is not subject to continued enforcement," and " [t]he judgment being satisfied by the issuance of a 1099, that event occurring before assignment of the judgment creditor (RTC), the satisfaction thus bars the assignee (the defendant FirstTrust Corporation) from enforcing the judgment." The court did not cite any principle of Texas law that would lend credence to these conclusions concerning release, satisfaction, or discharge of the judgment debt. In its judgment, the district court declared "that the Resolution Trust Corporation released judgments [sic] against the Plaintiffs ... so that Defendants cannot now collect from Plaintiffs on those judgments [sic]."

Even if the court was correct that the issuance of a 1099A form is evidence of an intent in some sense to "forgive" the debt, we find, as a matter of Texas law, that such an intent alone is insufficient to release or discharge a debt.[6] Furthermore, we hold that a write-off of a debt on the creditor's books is an accounting practice that does not of itself amount to a discharge or release of the debt.

A. Release or Discharge of Debt

It is well established in Texas that the mere communicated intent to forgive, without some further action by the creditor or debtor, cannot be the basis of a debt release or discharge. The general principle is that without additional consideration, a debtor's part-payment of a liquidated debt does not constitute an accord and satisfaction, even if the creditor and debtor agree that the debt is thereby discharged. See Jenkins v. Henry C. Beck Co., 449 S.W.2d 454, 455 (Tex. 1969) (setting out the requirements of accord and satisfaction), Jeanes v. Hamby, 685 S.W.2d 695, 697 (Tex. App. --Dallas 1984, writ ref'd n. r. e) (holding that the payee of a note who had obtained a judgment against guarantors did not release the judgment by executing a release in exchange for a part-payment of the judgment); Mathis v. Bill De La Garza & Associates, 778 S.W.2d 105, 107 (Tex. App.--Texarkana 1989, no writ) (holding that "the mere payment and acceptance of a sum of money less than the amount of an undisputed indebtedness does not constitute an accord and satisfaction,") (emphasis in original); 1 Tex.Jur.3d Accord and Satisfaction § 11 (1993).

While consideration is not necessary for a debt to be discharged by gift -from the creditor to the debtor, here appellees did not claim below (in their final amended complaint or in the pretrial order) that New MeraBank (or the RTC) had made any gift to them, and the district court made no finding or conclusion that there had been any gift. Nor would the evidence sustain any such finding. "The person claiming that a gift was made must prove the gift by clear and convincing evidence." Dorman v. Arnold, 932 S.W.2d 225, 227 (Tex.App. Texarkana, 1996, n.w.h.). "To constitute a gift inter vivos there must not only be a donative intention, but also a complete stripping of the donor of all dominion or control over the thing given. "Peterson v. Weiner, 71 S.W. 2d 544, 546 (Tex. Civ. App. San Antonio, 1934, writ ref'd) (no gift of note or debt represented thereby from holder to maker where former retains note).[7] Here there was plainly no "complete stripping" of New MeraBank "of all dominion or control over" the judgment debt. Although the 1099A forms do refer to "Promissory Note & Guaranty Agreement," the Promissory note and guaranty agreement on which the judgment was based were retained by New MeraBank (until transferred to Firstrust) and were not destroyed, endorsed, or marked "canceled," "released," "discharged" (or "paid"), or the like, and no express transfer or release of the note or guaranty was ever executed or delivered. The judgment is not mentioned in the 1099A forms. No purported transfer (other than to Firstrust), satisfaction, discharge, cancellation, or release of the judgment has ever been executed or delivered or noted in the records of the court entering the judgment or elsewhere.[8]

There is no evidence that appellees gave consideration in exchange for a debt forgiveness, or that New MeraBank (or the RTC) in any way divested itself of control or title to the note and guaranty and outstanding judgment by issuing the 1099A forms and writing off the debt. While the issuance of a 1099A form may reflect an intent in some sense to forgive the debt, it does not on its own have the legal effect of releasing or discharging the debt.

The fact that the New MeraBank subsequently "wrote off" the debt on its books (a fact never communicated to appellees) is even less significant than the 1099A forms. A write-off is merely an accounting practice or convention for reducing to zero the value of an asset as shown on a balance sheet. See A Dictionary of Accounting 343 (R. Hussey ed., 1995) (defining "write-off"). A bad debt that has been written off may still be recovered in the future and written back on the books again, Id at 39 (defining "bad debt recovered"). Thus, writing off a bad debt merely reflects the creditor's determination at the time that none of the debt is then either collectible or has any likelihood of ever becoming so, or that any collection expenses will likely exceed receipts, but it does not constitute a legally effective discharge or release of the indebtedness and it does not imply that the creditor intends to thereby legally divest himself of ownership of the debt or to legally preclude any further efforts to collect.

Since there was neither an accord and satisfaction nor a completed gift, it would be anomalous for us to uphold the district court's finding that the RTC released the debt without receiving any payment or relinquishing title to or control over the note, guaranty, or judgment. To hold otherwise would be a dramatic departure from settled Texas law.

B. Estoppel

As they did below, appellees invoke the somewhat amorphous doctrine of quasi-estoppel. This form of estoppel does not, at least normally, require either misrepresentation by the party to be estopped or detrimental reliance by the party invoking the estoppel. See Stimpson v. Plano Indep. School Dist., 743 S.W.2d 944, 946 (Tex. App. --Dallas 1987, writ denied), Cf. Matter of Davidson, 947 F.2d 1294, 1297 (5th Cir. 1991) (" [a]lthough detrimental reliance is not a necessary element of quasi-estoppel, we find that the existence of detrimental reliance in this case is an important factor" in determining to apply quasi-estoppel). Appellees rely on general statements in Texas intermediate appellate court opinions to the effect that quasi-estoppel "applies when it would be unconscionable to allow a person to maintain a position inconsistent with one in which he acquiesced, or of which he accepted a benefit,"Vessels v. Anschulz Corp., 823 S.W.2d 762, 765-66 (Tex. App. --Texarkana 1992, writ denied), or "precludes a party from asserting, to another's disadvantage, a right inconsistent with a position previously taken by him."El Paso Nat. Bank v. S. W. Numismatic Inv. G., 548 S.W.2d 942, 948 (Tex.Civ.App.--El Paso 1977, n.w.h.). But these overly general statements cannot be taken entirely literally, else every promise or assertion made would be judicially enforceable even though wholly unsupported by any consideration or reliance whatever and even though no benefit to the promisor or assertor, nor detriment to the other party, accrued by reason of the making of the promise or assertion. Actually, quasi-estoppel was not applied in either Vessels or El Paso Nat. Bank. Indeed, Vessels goes on to explain that "one who retains benefits under a transaction cannot avoid its obligations and is estopped to take an inconsistent position, "Id at 766, citing Theriot v. Smith, 263 S.W.2d 181, 183 (Tex. Civ. App. --Waco 1953, writ dism'd) ("[o]ne who retains benefits under a transaction cannot avoid its obligations, and is estopped to take a position inconsistent therewith"). This seems to be more a precise description of the core basis of equitable estoppel. See, e.g., Atkinson Gas

Co. v. Albrecht, 878 S.W.2d 236, 240 (Tex.App.--Corpus Christi 1994, writ denied) ("... quasi-estoppel forbids a party from accepting the benefits of a transaction or statute and then subsequently taking an inconsistent position to avoid corresponding obligations or effects"); Mexico's Industries, Inc. v. Banco Mexico Somex, 858 S.W.2d 577, 581 n. 7 (Tex.App.--El Paso 1993, writ denied) (same); Matter of Davidson, 947 F.2d 1294, 1297 (5th Cir. 1991) (same); Turcotte v. Trevino, 499 S.W.2d 705, 712 (Tex.Civ.App. -- Corpus Christi 1973, n.r.e.) (by virtue of estoppel "[w]here one having the right to accept or reject a transaction takes and retains benefits thereunder, he ordinarily ... cannot avoid its obligation or effect by taking a position inconsistent with it at a later time"). Here, there was never any transaction between or involving appellees and New MeraBank and the issuance of the 1099As was the entirely unilateral, unsolicited act of New MeraBank for or in relation to which New MeraBank received nothing from appellees (or anyone else). Indeed, there is no finding or evidence that New MeraBank received any benefit whatever from the issuance of the 1099As, either they may have reflected some character of forgiveness of the debt or even insofar as they may merely have reflected New MeraBank's determination that the debt was worthless. Quasi-estoppel has been held inapplicable where the conduct allegedly giving rise to the estoppel is not shown to have benefited the party sought to be estopped. Stimpson at 946. Indeed, even where some benefit has been received from the opposite party, quasi-estoppel is not always applied. Atkinson Gas Co. at 240. We hold that quasi-estoppel is inapplicable here.

All this is not to say that in analogous circumstances those in a position generally similar to that of appellees would necessarily be without any recourse. In such a situation, equitable estoppel may likely afford relief, as may also a claim for negligent misrepresentation, provided in each case that there is a showing of, inter alia, detrimental reliance. See, e.g., Federal Land Bank v. Sloane, 825 S.W.2d 439, 442 (Tex. 1991) (negligent misrepresentation claim requires detrimental reliance); Gulbenkian v. Penn, 151 Tex. 412, 252 S.W.2d 929, 932 (1952) (equitable estoppel requires detrimental reliance. Here, however, there is no evidence or finding of any detrimental reliance whatever by any of the appellees other than Dennis Ratliff, John Ratliff, and Truman Smith (see note 3, supra). Hence, none of the appellees other than these three is entitled to any relief whatever, Appellant at oral argument advised that it had no objection to awarding Dennis Ratliff, John Ratliff, and Truman Smith a credit on their liability on the August 1990 judgment to the extent of the federal income taxes they paid in reliance on the 1099As ($1,059.39 each for Dennis Ratliff and John Ratliff and $1,050 for Truman Smith), and we thus hold those three appellees are entitled to such a credit. Because this is the extent of the detriment shown to be suffered by each of these three, none is entitled to any further relief or to complete cancellation of the indebtedness. See, e.g., Sloane at 443 (negligent misrepresentation damages limited to reliance damages); Sun Oil Co. v. Madeley, 626 S.W.2d 726, 734 (Tex, 198 1) ("The damages recoverable by a party claiming estoppel are limited to the amount necessary to compensate that party for a loss already suffered"); Keado v. United States, 853 F. 2d 1209, 1218 (5th Cir, 1988) ("Recovery under an estoppel theory is limited to the amount necessary to compensate for the loss suffered "and " "One recovering under promissory estoppel should not experience a windfall").

II. Attorneys' Fees

Appellant and appellees (by cross-appeal) each complain of the district court's denial of their respective requests for an award of attorneys' fees. We reject all these contentions, concluding that neither appellant nor appellees have demonstrated reversible error in the district court's rulings in this respect.

Conclusion

We conclude that the district court erred by granting any relief to appellees other than Dennis Ratliff, John Ratliff, and Truman Smith, and that as to said three appellees no relief should be awarded other than a credit on their liability on the principal amount of the August 1990 judgment in the amount of $1,059.39 each for Dennis Ratliff and John Ratliff and $1,050 for Truman Smith (said credit in each case to be as of the date each of said parties respectively paid said amounts to the IRS in respect to the 1099As issued them by New MeraBank).

Accordingly, the judgment of the district court is affirmed in part and reversed in part, and the cause is remanded for entry of judgment in conformity herewith.

AFFIRMED in part; REVERSED in part; CAUSE REMANDED with instructions.

1. [1]As a matter of convenience, we have referred to the RTC as "owner" of the judgment. That is not technically correct. Since the RTC was a conservator, rather than a receiver, it merely gained control, not ownership, of New MeraBank's assets. The assets were owned by New MeraBank, and thus the transactions at issue in this case concerning former MeraBank assets were ordered by the RTC but were ultimately executed by it in New MeraBank's name and on its behalf

2. [2]The original judgment of $113,000 was rendered jointly and severally against eighteen guarantors and I. G.P. It appears from the record that only sixteen 1099A forms in the amount of $7062.50 each were issued (for a total of $113,000). Each of the male appellees received one, and the sixteenth 1099A form was sent to a guarantor who is not a party to the current litigation. The "Description of Property" block on each form contains the words "Promissory Note & Guaranty Agreement." There is no reference to the judgment. The forms are unsigned.

3. [3]The district court found that "[s]ome of the plaintiffs reported income as a result of the 1099A on their 1991 (federal income] tax form and some did not." This is the only finding made as to any income tax payments or reporting by plaintiffs; no finding is made as to any assessment by the IRS or any actual liability to the IRS in regard to the subject matter of the 1099As on the part of any individual plaintiff or plaintiffs collectively, The only evidence of any income tax payments made (or reported or assessed as owing) as a result of, or in relation to, the 1099As or their subject matter, are payments of $1,059.39 each by plaintiffs Dennis Ratliff and John Ratliff and $1,050 by plaintiff Truman Smith. In its conclusions of law, the district court opined

"[w]hen the 1099s were issued, in addition to the indebtedness being forgiven, each plaintiff recipient had a taxable event. They became a recipient of income based upon a discharge of the indebtedness from the judgment creditor.... Whether or not they paid the IRS what they owed on their 1991 1040 is of a matter between them and the IRS and is not before the Court." As we hold that the issuance of the 1099s did not discharge plaintiffs' liability on the judgment, it follows that they did not thereby become "a recipient of income based upon a discharge of the indebtedness from the judgment creditor."

4. [4]In its request, the RTC noted, as "reasons for write off," that: I.G.P. and James Sweeney, a guarantor and appellee, were in bankruptcy; another guarantor, Howard Watson III, had already been discharged from bankruptcy; H.H. Adams, a guarantor, had passed away and his estate had settled for $7,000; and the loan amount was not big enough to warrant asset searches on the fifteen remaining guarantors. The request asks for permission "to write the loan balance to zero."

5. [5]No appeal has been taken from the district court's denial of the other claims.

6. [6]Because intent alone is insufficient, we need not reach the issues of whether there was sufficient evidence that the RTC intended to "forgive" the debt or whether the issuance of a 1099A form reflects such an intent as matter of law,

7. [7]See also, e.g., Cogdill v. First National Bank of Quitaque, 193 S.W. 2d 701, 702 (Tex.Civ.App.Amarillo 1946, n.w.h,) ("... to establish a gift ... it is necessary to prove both the delivery of the subject matter by the donor to the donee and the intention to vest in the donee unconditionally and immediately the ownership of the property delivered"); O'Donnell v. Halladay, 152 S.W.2d 847, 850-51

(Tex.Civ.App., El Paso 1941, ref'd w.o.m.) ("In order that there be an effective gift ... there must be a delivery to or for the benefit of the donee.... By 'deliver' in this sense is meant a surrender of possession of the property, or the symbol of the property, to the donee, with the intention and purpose of then vesting title in the donee"); Benavides v. Laredo National Bank, 91 S.W.2d 372, 374 (Tex. Civ.App.Eastland 1936, n.w.h.) (no gift unless donor " "has divested himself absolutely and completely of the title, dominion, and control of the subject of the gift"); Harmon v. Schmitz, 39 S.W.2d 587, 589 (Tex.Com.App. 1931) (gift requires that the donor have effected " "the irrevocable transfer of the present title, dominion, and control of the thing given, so that the donor can exercise no further act of dominion or control over it'"; the required "delivery must be not only of possession, but also of dominion and control'"; and " "the intention [to make gift] must be effected by a complete and unconditional delivery").

8. [8]Moreover, New MeraBank's issuance of the 1099As--a wholly unilateral, unsolicited act--does not of itself constitute the "clear and convincing evidence" necessary to establish the donative intent required for gift. There is no evidence of any relationship between appellees and New MeraBank other than that of judgment debtor-creditor on a business debt, and nothing suggests that appellees were ever actual or potential customers of New MeraBank. The 1099As may reflect New MeraBank's business decision not to thereafter seek to collect any of the debt or deal with it as to any extent potentially collectible or valuable. However, there is no clear and convincing evidence that a purpose of issuing the 1099As was to thereby effect a transfer to appellees of title and ownership of the debt, as opposed to merely complying with what was thought to be required by IRS or RTC regulations, had more than the latter been intended doubtless some more customary or formal method of handling the matter would have been employed.

FINAL JUDGMENT

This case having come to trial before the Court, in accordance with the Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law filed today, the Court declares that the Resolution Trust Corporation released judgments against the Plaintiffs based on a Note and Guarantee Agreements Plaintiffs had signed, so that Defendants cannot now collect from the Plaintiffs on those judgments. It is hereby ORDERED, ADJUDGED and DECREED that all parties take nothing on their claims against each other, and that each party shall bear his own costs and attorney's fees.

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

This case was tried before the Court without a jury and after hearing the evidence, including but not limited to Plaintiffs' Exhibits 22, 25 and the Plaintiffs' highly credible expert, and after considering the argument of counsel and relevant authority, the Court makes the following findings of fact and conclusions of law:

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. Male plaintiffs in this case signed a Guarantee Agreement guaranteeing a promissory note signed in 1984.

2. On June 1, 1987 a "Modification Agreement* was signed by the male plaintiffs.

3. The note was not paid. On August 23, 1990 a state district court in Tarrant County, Texas entered a Judgment in favor of MeraBank, Texas, FSB against the male plaintiffs, jointly and severally. The amount of the Judgment was $113,000.00 in principal, $5,006.85 in interest through August 23, 1990, reasonable attorney's fees of $6,289.40, and it was ordered that the Judgment would bear interest at the highest rate allowed by law from the date of Judgment until paid.

4. After several name changes, the financial institution holding the Judgment on the note and Guarantee Agreements ended up in the hands of the Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC).

5. The RTC as conservator of New MeraBank Texas, FSB, caused to be issued a Form 1099A to each of the male plaintiffs herein for the tax year 1991.

6. Some of the plaintiffs reported income as a result of the 1099A on their 1991 tax form and some did not.

7. Review of the exhibits and the credible evidence, including the testimony of the plaintiffs' expert (a former RTC employee), causes the Court to believe that the issuance of the 1099A forms by the RTC evidenced their intent to forgive the debt and the issuance of the 1099A forms, from their practice, did indeed evidence their intent to write off the judgment debt.

8. The write off of the judgment debt and the issuance of the 1099 forms was inconsistent with the further enforcement of the judgment.

9. The judgment debt was forgiven.

10. The banking industry generally and the RTC particularly intended to forgive debt when they issued 1099 forms to borrowers or judgment debtors. This was so that the borrower/judgment debtor could report on his or her tax return the event of the forgiveness of the indebtedness and the benefit conferred.

11. The defendant in this case, Firstrust, Corporation, purchased a package of judgments from the RTC. This was done after the issuance of the 1099s by the RTC. Ile terms of the sale by the RTC to the defendant specifically stated that no warranties, expressed or implied, were being made as to the enforceability, collectability, etc. of the judgments and further made no representations as to any defenses that might lie. In essence, the RTC told defendant that the defendant Firstrust Corporation should apply the maxim of "let the buyer beware".

12. The defendant tried to collect on the judgments. This included a garnishment action.

13. The Court finds that at all times Kenneth Turner acted in his individual capacity and has no individual liability as to any of the plaintiffs' claims.

14. The Court finds that the defendants, defendants' counsel and all employees in the garnishment action acted in good faith. The evidence is insufficient for the Court to conclude by preponderance of the evidence that any defendant or anyone associated with any defendant engaged in a "wrongful garnishment".

15. The Court finds that when the affidavits in support of the garnishment action were made they were made based upon an honest and good faith evaluation of the facts available to the defendants at the time.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Court finds and declares that the RTC released the judgments when they issued the 1099 forms. This was industry practice generally and the RTC's practice particularly from the evidence presented to the Court.

2. When the defendant purchased the guarantees evidencing the judgment in this ca they were worthless. Any recourse that exists would be between the defendant purchaser and the RTC seller. The plaintiffs herein can not be blamed if the defendant contracted away when it purchased from the RTC any recourse that it might have for purchasing worthless judgments.

3. When the 1099s were issued, in addition to the indebtedness being forgiven, each plaintiff recipient had a taxable event. They became a recipient of income based upon a discharge of the indebtedness from the judgment creditor, and therefore could not continue to be liable on the same indebtedness that was subject to the discharge. Whether or not they paid the IRS what they owed on their 1991 1040 is of a matter that is between them and the IRS and is not before the Court.

4. The judgment involved in this case is not subject to continued enforcement.

5. The judgment being satisfied by the issuance of a 1099, that event occurring before assignment of the judgment creditor (RTC), the satisfaction thus bars the assignee (the defendant Firstrust Corporation) from enforcing the judgment.

6. There was no liability established as to any claim against Kenneth T. Turner, individually.

7. The evidence is insufficient to establish that the defendant or anyone acting in concert with the defendant engaged in a "wrongful garnishment" or that they engaged in any violation of either the Texas or Federal Debt Collection Practices Act.

8. The right to attorney's fees was not proven by any party.

9. It is the conclusion of the Court, which will be reflected in the Judgment, that all parties take absolutely nothing from any other party on any of the claims made in this lawsuit.

SO ORDERED.

FINAL JUDGMENT ON MANDATE AFTER APPEAL

A certified copy of the opinion of the United States Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit. and direction as to costs, that were issued as the mandate under FRAP 41. on April 10, 1998, were filed in this Court, whereby it appears that on February 6, 1998, upon appeal by Firstrust Corporation defendant - counter claimant - appellant - cross-appellee and James A. Long, and wife; James A. King, and wife; Raymond

King, and wife; Jerry Pate Long, and wife; Homer L. Long, and wife; Kelvin King, and wife; Truman Smith, and wife; Sam Fulton, and wife; David Sweeney, and wife; Jimmy Sweeney, and wife; James Sweeney, Bob Graves. and wife; John Ratliff, and wife; Dennis Ratliff, and wife; J. P. Ratliff, and wife, plaintiffs - counter defendants -appellees - cross appellants, Gayle Long, Mary Ann King, Minnie Lee King, Susie Long, Ann Long, Sharon King, Nadaiah Smith, Madge Fulton, Sue Sweeney, Lynette Sweeney, Mariana Graves, Diana Ratliff, Toni Ratliff, and Mary Blanche Ratliff, Plaintiffs-Counter Defendants -Appellees. from the judgment of this Court dated October 31, 1996, the said Court of Appeals affirmed this Court's decision denying attorney's fees to both parties and reversed and rendered the declaratory judgment, in the following words:

> "Appellant and appellees (by cross-appeal) each complain of the district court's denial of their respective requests for an award of attorney's fees. We reject all these contentions, concluding that neither appellant nor appellees have demonstrated reversible error in the district court's rulings in this respect.
> We conclude that the district court erred by granting any relief to appellees other than Dennis Ratliff, John Ratliff and Truman Smith, and that as to said three appellees no relief should be awarded other than a credit on their liability on the principle amount of the August 1990 judgment in the amount of $1,059.39 each for Dennis Ratliff and John Ratliff and $1,050.00 for Truman Smith (said credit in each case to be as of the date each of said parties respectively paid said amounts to > the IRS in respect to the 1099As issued them by New MeraBank)"
